Connected and Automated Vehicle technologies are coming; and they will bring with them a wide range of operational, safety, environmental, and institutional benefits and impacts. Adopting and implementing these new technologies cannot be achieved by any single organization. It will require a public-private partnership, and a community of engineers, planners, legislators, technology companies and automobile manufacturers working on the many new issues that are related to the successful implementation of these technologies.

Please discuss one (or more) of the critical issues that public and/or private agencies will face, and possible strategies that could be used to begin planning for this issue (or these issues) in the near future.
